

Ash has been my trusted accountant and advisors on Financial Matters for nearly 25 years.

He worked with my wife's company, an international consultancy firm. She said he had a real spark, so we tried him....and here we near nearly a generation later still doing business...a rare recipe in this modern age arising from the necessity to change supplier to supplier to obtain the best at the cheapest cost.

Not in this case. We believe that we have had the best value at best cost and so the relationship continues and hopefully will continue for years to come.

Ash is not like ordinary accountants. He always saves you money and he knows how to make you money. He has ideas that show he cares about your well-being, not just your money. He works hard to make the mundane tasks easy, good value and computerized, so things run smoothly.

But that is just a small part of his offer. He is very unusual.

Ash is an oxymoron. A creative accountant. He doesn't see things the same as most accountants, but sees around corners for you. Sometimes you have to listen twice to him, as his accent is a little tough for the uninitiated. But he always is worth listening to.

He helped me set up my own company, gave me great tax advice, and then helped me run the company for a great price.

I have little hesitation in recommending him, especially to creative business people who want to concentrate on being creative.
